Provo LDS Tabernacle, S.University

Beautiful! Gorgeous! Fantastic! Neat! Cool! Those are only a handful of the adjectives visitors in downtown Provo use to describe the central city lights display.

Town Square storefronts, the Provo LDS Tabernacle and trees along Center St. and University Ave. were decorated with thousands of small white lights for the holidays, making Provo City's business district look like a twinkling fairylane. The Utah County building was also spruced up for the season.

The efforts have earned rave reviews.

"I love it!" said Cindy Barbakos of Orem. "It gives you the spirit." Mrs. Barbakos and husband Craig were downtown with their three children to visit Santa Claus in his shop on Center Street. Her husband especially liked how the lights defined the beauty of the old buildings.

"It makes you feel like you're in New York or something," commented Julie Anderson of Provo. She and her husband, Allan, were herding four youngsters aged one to six toward Santa's house. In papa Anderson's opinion, the lights make downtown Provo "as pretty as Temple Square in Salt Lake."

"I think we're beginning to rival Temple Square," agreed Elizabeth Wilson of Provo. She and husband Byron were window shopping along Center Street with their three kids. "It ought to bring a lot of people downtown," Mr. Wilson said.

"The only thing I've seen that's close to this is Temple Square," echoed Ray Perdue of Idaho Falls, Ida., a Brigham Young University student strolling with girlfriend Ray Perdue from Virginia. She said, "It is really pretty. I've never seen this done before."

The three DeAdder teenagers of Orem had just seen the lights for the first time. The excitement was in their eyes. "We think it's neat," said Stefani, 19. "It's cool," said 12-year-old Tyler. Practical-minded Kevin said, "It's probably costing them a lot of money."

"They're gorgeous," said Duane Jensen of Springville, his wife Evelyn, cradling a bundled baby in her arms, chiming in, "Simply lovely."

Provoan Ray Funk's enthusiasm about the lights spread beyond the valley's borders. "I've had my son-in-law come in from Vernal to look them over, and he and my daughter really enjoyed them. They even took my two-year-old granddaughter on the double-decker bus."

Free daytime transportation and an evening city lights tour on a British doubledecker bus owned by Town Square Transit, Ltd., were part of the holiday package prepared by Provo merchants to entice shoppers downtown.

Town Square Associates leasing agent Kevin Mortenson said the lights "were well worth it," despite the fact that channeling the team of electricians to stringing the lights effectively delayed the grand opening of the Town Square Mall by several weeks.

"Of all the things we've done, the lights have been the best. We've gotten a fantastic response."

Town Square can't take all the credit—Provo City and the Fire Department also deserve a pat on the back for their cooperation, providing hook and ladder trucks during the three weeks it took to put up the lights.
